

Hi

statement via Callum Flynn .

I believe this drug is essential to all young people in their fight against primary bone cancer. Just recently Scotland have passed this drug and it is now available to patients of bone cancer. as an osteo sufferer i feel this is unfair as this should be widely available for all young sufferers as it has been proven to work and increase survival rate . as a young sufferer myself who has been clear two years my wish is to help other suffers and the ones yet to be diagnosed , i have met on my journey numerous sufferers and families of young loved ones who have not been as lucky as me and have sadly passed away ,and it is this reason why i feel passionately to get this drug available in the u.k.

There have been no new treatments in the past twenty years and i feel we need to take a chance on this breakthrough, any new drug to help fight this deadly disease should be available regardless of the cost . this is the reason i took it upon myself to start fundraising for bone cancer research in the hope that someday new drugs would be available in the fight against cancer.

Kind regards
